Tabiona Named After Indian And Daughter

By DOROTHY O. REA
News Staff Writer

Tabiona is a dream-come-true for the lover of the outdoors. It reclines in its high mountain valley in Duchesne County and looks back to the day in 1905 when homesteaders drew lots for their property.

Or it stands tip-toe on its surrounding peaks to look ahead to the prosperity of untouched coal reserves and the activity which will herald construction of the Upper Colorado River Storage Project.

The homes of the 375 Tabionans nestle along the Duchesne River valley at the foot of Tabby Mountain. The mountain took its name from a revered Indian, the late Chief Tabby. The town added the name of the chief's daughter, Ona.

The giant tunnel that will carry water from Rock Creek to Strawberry Reservoir will travel within six miles of Tabiona. Already a big pipeline traverses the country as it carries crude oil from the Rangely oil fields to the Salt Lake refinery. Pumping station for the pipeline is located between Tabiona and Hanna, bringing new residents to the area.

Among the town's leaders are Mayor Claude L. Wagstaff, Bishop Bernell Turnbow and Clarence White.

Mr. White has brought fame to his community besides serving for many years as the mayor. He is a former president of the Utah Wildlife Assn. and has worked on a national scale for preservation of rare species of wildlife such as the Key deer of Florida. He gained a world's record for "bringing back alive" 28 mountain lions in one month from the Tabby Mountain area.

We traveled up the mountain with Mr. White. From our 9,000 foot vantage point we could see Tabiona's future drawn to the earth's scale. There's lumber and water aplenty and there are long acres of choice farmland and pasture for stockraising.

There's a plateau which stretches itself into a perfect location for a future airstrip, planned by the community. This will enable business men from western cities to fly into a literal paradise of fishing, hunting and camping.

Mr. White's description of the future airport was accented by the sight of deer scaling Tabby Mountain and posing for us on the skyline.

Mr. White located a TV signal on the mountain and brought the 6½-mile line down over the rugged mountain contour so residents of Tabiona and Duchesne can enjoy the facility.

This year there were a few boys and the potential is about seven boys for next year. Truly a land of milk and honey, Tabiona produces quantities of Grade A milk and it is only a bee's flight away from the honeyland of the Uintah basin.

Bureau Supports Larger Of Parks

WASHINGTON—The Bureau of Budget favors the proposal to include Zion National Monument within Zion National Park. Rep. Henry A. Dixon reported.

Rep. Dixon has a bill in the House to effect the merger.

He quoted a letter from Assistant budget director Robert E. Merriam to the House Interior Committee, which said:

"If enacted, this bill would combine into a single administrative unit the Zion National Monument and Zion National Park."
